I can never forget that moment. The man was blind One! two! The grandfather-clock rang out sharply. Three months later the book was published. Very few copies were sold. It was not a book such as the ordinary person would enjoy or understand. Another month passed by, and in the evening of each day the author sat alone in his chajr, looking into space and seeing nothing. One day, gazing across the lake I saw a canoe put out and come slowly towards our landing. When the craft touched shore a lady stepped out and walked with hesitation up to the house. I felt that something great was going to happen, but I didn t know how to tell the man, so I sat still. As she approached the house I saw that she was beautiful, and...
